Manager's commentary

Stock markets have risen to new highs in the last month. Evidence of a flattening out in the industrial activity's descent year-on-year and easier monetary policy generally has the promise of a pickup in global growth for next year.

Coming alongside cautious retail interest in financial assets, the result has been a strong rally in bank shares and in cyclicals. Who cares that inventories are high because industries were encouraged not to cut back in the downturn and that interest rates are already on the floor. The show must go on.

As Mervyn King, the ex-Governor of the Bank of England, said recently, 'Whereas 10 years ago we had too much debt and too much spending. Today we have too much debt and too little spending.' Governments are now falling over themselves with ways to borrow and spend and no one worries that the public sector's ability to spend money wisely is even worse than the private sector's.

For too long one has been unable to imagine how this long cycle will end. Earnings long ago ceased to be the driver. Technology was seen as providing the growth and valued accordingly. Now there is evidence of the large tech companies starting an arms race - Disney Plus, Apple+, Comcast, Verizon - as well as Microsoft and Amazon giving away software for free which is currently provided by competitors who are expensively valued by the market. We have been here before and the end has not come, but now all the performance is coming from the price / earnings ratio rising, not the earnings. If the spending plans come true, we could be the witness to inflation replacing deflation.

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance. The total returns of the Odey International Fund (the Fund) over specified periods are shown in the table on the first page. Total returns are calculated after taking into account performance fees. A performance fee equal to 20.5% (including GST and net of RITC) of the amount the Fund outperforms its hurdle. The total return performance figures quoted are historical, calculated using end-of-month mid-prices and do not allow for the effects of income tax or inflation. Total returns assume the reinvestment of all distributions. The performance is quoted net of all fees and expenses.
